‘4a. Member States shall ensure that consulates have a complaints procedure in place for visa applicants. Information on this procedure shall be made available by the consulate on their website and, where applicable, by the external service provider. Member States shall ensure that a record of complaints is kept.’;

Justification

It is a good administrative practice and also in line with the right to good administration as laid down in Article 41 of the Charter to have a complaints procedure. So far no such procedure is foreseen in the Visa Code although it is the case for border crossing-points according to Annex II of the Schengen Borders Code.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

Introduction

This draft report is the result of a thorough preparatory process. Input for it was provided by the shadow rapporteurs and other Members following the presentation of the proposal in the LIBE Committee on 20 June 2018, during the public hearing on 'the Visa Code and Humanitarian Visas' held on 12 July, and during numerous stakeholders meetings including with many Member States' (MS) representatives, as well as the Commission's services and by individuals who brought specific concerns regarding the current Visa Code to the attention of the rapporteur. The rapporteur greatly benefitted from these contributions and therefore wishes to thank all those who contributed.

In the following, the rapporteur sets out his views on the proposal and outlines the reasoning underlying the main amendments presented.

On the proposal in general

As stated during the meetings with the shadow rapporteurs and in the LIBE Committee, the rapporteur welcomes in general the proposal, although he does not agree entirely with some of the amending articles. He recognises that most of the content of the proposal are technical elements such as the practical modalities for lodging and application, the Member State competent for examining and deciding on an application, visa and service fees, application form, supporting documents, etc. The rapporteur observes that - while maintaining the same very high standards regarding safeguarding public security and preventing irregular migration - it is indeed necessary to take a wider perspective and to recognise the importance for the EU as a whole to facilitate legitimate travel towards it. For the rapporteur the procedures set up in the Visa Code play a critical role for many and important economic sectors, such as the tourism, which is of particular importance for many regions in Europe. The rapporteur therefore fully supports the procedural facilitations proposed, for example, the possibility of filling in and signing the application form electronically.

However, the current proposal of the Commission links the visa policy to 'ensure a better balance between migration and security concerns, economic considerations and general external relations.' (recital (2)). For the rapporteur it is not clear what the term 'migration and security concerns' refers to exactly. This is, however, paramount to understand the ultimate goal of the some of the amendments contained in the proposal. In addition, as highlighted by the European Data Protection Supervisor (EDPS), when repeatedly referring to migration, internal security and the fight against terrorism almost interchangeably bears a risk of blurring the boundaries between migration management and the fight against terrorism¹. For the rapporteur, the economic considerations and the link to the external relations are almost not present in the proposal, when compared to the references to the security aspects. He regrets this approach, especially when the economic aspects of the bona fide travellers are more numerous than any security concern. In this sense, the Commission Impact Assessment repeatedly refers to 'increased migratory and security risks', while admitting that 'the vast majority of visa applicants are not posing any security and/or migratory threat to the EU'¹.

Finally under these general considerations, the rapporteur observes that this proposal is not the first one the Commission has put forward this term to amend the current Visa Code. Already, in April 2014, the Commission adopted a first proposal for a recast of the Visa Code. Intense work followed and trilogue negotiations started in May 2016. However, due to divergences in the positions of the European Parliament and the Council, negotiations did not progress, despite the considerable efforts and perseverance of the negotiation team of the European Parliament. The rapporteur finds necessary to note that during those negotiations both Commission and Council opposed the inclusion of provisions on humanitarian visas in the Visa Code, which were included in the negotiation mandate of the European Parliament. Moreover the Council refused to continue negotiations if these amendments were not withdrawn. For the sake of finding a compromise, this withdrawal finally took place and instead, a legislative own-initiative is currently under preparation to call upon the Commission to present a separate legislative act on Humanitarian Visas. The Commission finally withdrew the recast proposal. In March this year, the Commission presented a new proposal to reform the Visa Code.

On specific aspects

While the rapporteur shares in general the approach of the Commission, there are a number of issues on which amendments are proposed.

The proposal includes a new role for the visa policy 'as a leverage in EU readmission policy' (new article 25a, Cooperation on readmission policy). This inclusion of readmission elements in visa policy is new, although it was suggested already in different documents, both by the Commission and the Council, but never at such legislative level. The Commission appreciates that visa policy can play an important role to obtain better leverage vis-à-vis third countries on readmission of irregular migrants. However, the Commission admits that 'as the Visa Code was not designed for use as leverage towards individual third countries, but rather as a means of standardising visa issuing procedures and conditions, it is not entirely suited to the new political context'².

Even more, the Commission recognises that 'it is also clear that better cooperation on readmission with reluctant third countries cannot be obtained through visa policy measures alone' and considers necessary to develop 'a policy mix of positive and negative incentives in various areas (in particular development cooperation, trade, investments, education) to sway a country's attitude'³.

Unfortunately, these other measures of policy mix are not available in the Commission proposal, which only contains measures concerning cooperation by third countries on the readmission of irregular migrants.

Furthermore, there is regrettable lack of data evidence. Even more, the Commission in its impact assessment expressively recognises that “there is no hard evidence on how visa leverage can translate into better cooperation of third countries on readmission”¹. Moreover, the rapporteur shares the views expressed at the *Appraisal of the European Parliament to the Commission Impact Assessment*², which highlights that the objective to advance the EU's interests in the area of return and admission by increasing leverage vis-à-vis non-cooperative third countries in the visa policy area lacks the specificity required by the Better Regulation Guidelines³. The Commission's Impact Assessment does not identify any operational objectives, which will likely complicate the further monitoring and evaluation of the achievement of the objectives.

Finally, the rapporteur thinks that it is quite paradoxical that while the Commission and the Council repeatedly expressed that the Visa Code was not the relevant place for Humanitarian Visas, the Commission considers the Visa Code the instrument for ‘leverage in EU readmission policy’, while not offering sufficient data evidence, nor the needed policy mix instruments to achieve the general goals.

Under these considerations, the rapporteur has considered necessary to delete this article.

On the issue of the travel medical insurance (TMI), the rapporteur considers that applicants should not be required to present travel medical insurance when lodging an application for a short stay visa. In line with the Commission recast proposal, the rapporteur agrees that TMI is an disproportionate burden for visa applicants and that there is no evidence that holders of short stay visas present a bigger risk in terms of public medical expenditure in Member States than the visa exempted third country nationals. Therefore, an amendment is tabled to delete the travel medical insurance.

As regards the procedure, the rapporteur observes that some of the proposals should be further strengthened. It should, for example, be possible to lodge an application not only six month before the intended travel but up to nine months before. The rapporteur considers that such a period corresponds better to today's travel patterns especially as international plane tickets are often substantially cheaper when booked early.

The rapporteur agrees with the Commission that the cascade system issuing of multiple-entry visas (MEVs) with a longer validity to bona fide travellers constitutes an advantage not only those travellers but for consulates as well. Following this approach, the rapporteur has tabled amendments to improve the system.

Finally, the rapporteur suggests a number of clarifications regarding the procedure for appeal and a new provision that all consulates have a procedure for complaints. Having such a procedure constitutes good administrative practice and is important for the image of the MS and the EU. Most consulates probably already have one but the rapporteur wishes to include this in the Code. In addition, a properly organised complaint system might reduce the number of formal appeals which constitute an additional workload for consulates and which are often only lodged because an aspect of the procedure was not well understood before.
