

EUROPEAN COMMISSION

Ursula von der Leyen
The President

Brussels, 25. 06. 2023

Dear colleagues,

Ahead of the Special meeting of the European Council in February, and again before the March European Council, I wrote to you setting out two common and mutually reinforcing work strands in the field of migration, putting forward a European response to a common European challenge.

This time we will meet against the backdrop of significant advances on the key components of New Pact on Migration and Asylum. The general approaches achieved on the Asylum and Migration Management Regulation and the Asylum Procedures Regulation are an important milestone. The compromise found among Member States offers an achievable and fair solution, that will also safeguard the rights of migrants and asylum seekers. Together with the Eurodac, Screening and Crisis proposals, the compromise strikes a fair balance between solidarity and responsibility. It provides a solid basis to immediately start discussions with the European Parliament, which on its side is devoting major efforts and is ready with strong mandates for the trilogue phase. There is still work ahead and the Commission stands ready to support the co-legislators to ensure agreement by the end of this mandate in line with the Joint Roadmap.

To advance the EU's collective response, it is indispensable that while we work on the Pact, we continue to act decisively and deliver on the operational measures and, in parallel, start reflections on a future implementation plan. Last week's shipwreck is yet another call to action, highlighting the urgency to intensify our work with partner countries, to redouble our efforts in the fight against migrant smuggling, to limit irregular departures in overcrowded and unseaworthy boats, and to work on alternative legal pathways, thereby bringing an end to unnecessary suffering and unfortunate loss of life. Our collective efforts show that the EU can achieve its objectives in this area, and we are stand ready to continue developing new ways of advancing on these objectives including through out-of-the box thinking. An overview of our current work can be found in the annex to this letter, and here I would like to highlight important progress since March.

Work with key partners remains crucial to our success. The Commission will seek new comprehensive partnerships with third countries, based on mutually beneficial cooperation that can support engagement on common objectives and shared areas of interest. Our aim should be for our current initiative with Tunisia to act as a blueprint for similar partnerships in the future. My visit to Tunis on 11 June with Prime Minister Meloni and Prime Minister Rutte showed the value of the Team Europe approach. Tunisia has been one of our key partners for many years. We are now ready to reinvigorate our relations around a comprehensive partnership based on five pillars: macro-financial assistance as soon as the necessary conditions are met, strengthening economic and trade ties, cooperation on green energy, migration, and boosting people to people contacts. Commissioner Várhelyi is expected to finalise a Memorandum of Understanding with Tunisia on all these issues shortly.

The migration pillar in this comprehensive partnership is shaped by an Anti-Smuggling Operational Partnership agreed with Tunisia at the time of Commissioner Johansson's visit in April. Boosting Tunisia's capacities in migration and border management will allow us to work together on the key challenges: the fight against migrant smuggling, managing migrants inside Tunisia, returns to countries of origin and readmission to Tunisia. In addition, we are advancing on a Talent Partnership, with the first round-table discussion on 22 June thereby fostering mobility at all skill levels in a mutually beneficial manner. Your bilateral contributions also make a real difference as part of a Team Europe approach, alongside the powerful symbolism of the joint missions showing a united EU approach.

Since March we have seen the value of concerted, targeted outreach deploying a comprehensive approach in Tunisia and with other partners. Vice-President Schinas' visit to Egypt in March brought a deeper understanding of shared priorities including management of the land border with Libya and anti-smuggling. The visit of High Representative/Vice-President Borrell, on 17 June, also reflected the intensified need for support following mass displacement of Sudanese refugees fleeing conflict in their country.

Work continues on the implementation of the Action Plan for the Central Mediterranean, with two more vessels having been delivered to the Libyan Coast Guard to reinforce search and rescue capacities. The recently adopted Action Plan for the Western Mediterranean and Atlantic Routes highlighted the importance of continuing to strengthen our cooperation with Morocco and West African countries. The Commission will pursue work on the Action Plan for the Eastern Mediterranean, building on the EU-Türkiye Statement. This will require a comprehensive dialogue with Türkiye based on discussions with Member States.

Consistent, targeted work, based on the Action Plan, has brought results in the Western Balkans, with a significant reduction in irregular movements and where major progress has been made on intensifying cooperation with Frontex. The work on Status Agreements has advanced in Albania and Serbia. Deployments are already under way in North Macedonia and will soon follow in Montenegro. Once again, the value and strength of concerted outreach has been demonstrated by the progress achieved in visa policy alignment with the EU by Western Balkans partners. In particular, Serbia has taken major steps on visa alignment and has committed to adopt a visa harmonisation plan by the end of 2023.

We have also been looking at the longer-term risks from a lack of visa policy alignment and how the visa suspension mechanism could take these better into account. In this regard, the Commission adopted a Communication on the monitoring of the EU's visa-free travel regimes launching a consultation process to adopt a legislative proposal that amends the visa suspension mechanism this autumn. Experience has shown how a coordinated message can have a decisive impact on the readiness of our partners to step up readmission. In the case of Iraq, the intensive dialogue with the authorities following the Commission's proposal under Article 25a of the Visa Code led to positive results and Iraq has started a constructive dialogue with 15 Member States to find sustainable solutions to return and reintegration in full respect of humanitarian standards.

We need to follow-up consistently with partner countries and in this regard, I reiterate the importance of signing the post-Cotonou agreement, which is a comprehensive legally binding framework, central for cooperation activities, including on migration, with partner countries.

Effective management of the external borders remains a priority. The challenges and the evolving complexity at our borders, including hybrid threats, demand operational flexibility and adaptability, taking also into consideration the current geopolitical landscape and the transforming migration patterns. In this regard, we need to continue intensifying our support to Member States faced with challenges at the external border. Direct support has been provided to Member States to strengthen control of EU external borders through Frontex deployments, provision of equipment, and electronic surveillance capacity.*

Tangible progress has been made on the two pilot projects set up in March by Bulgaria and Romania, as a follow-up to my letter to you in January. Close coordination between the Commission, national authorities and the EU agencies is well established, and concrete steps are under way to improve procedures at the external borders. Bulgaria has taken operational steps to improve the accelerated asylum procedures and it is expanding its operational cooperation with the European Agency for Asylum (EUAA), as well as with Frontex and Europol, in the areas of border management, returns, and to counter smuggling networks. Romania's work under the pilot project has already led to changes in national asylum legislation, to allow for closer participation of EUAA experts in the registration and assessment of asylum applications and for the issuing of a negative decision on international protection together with a return decision. Intensified operational cooperation with the EUAA and Frontex is now under way, in particular on returns by aligning IT systems. Romania has also taken the opportunity to explore new ways to step up cooperation with Serbia, with a common patrol protocol.

The deeper cooperation being pioneered under the two pilot projects is matched by work to make existing cooperation mechanisms more effective. We are working on the implementation of the Dublin Roadmap. The Commission will present a set of good practices to enhance the effectiveness of the Dublin Regulation. At the same time, the Commission is working closely with Member States to address the challenges related to search and rescue by improving situational awareness in the Mediterranean and continues to work towards putting in place an enhanced cooperation framework in this area.

We are also making sure that the EU is prepared to address new operational methods of smuggling networks, such as in the Toolbox that the Commission presented on 5 June to address the use of commercial travel to facilitate irregular migration to the EU. To be effective in breaking down the business model of smugglers, we need to have a credible system of resettlement and complementary pathways, and therefore I take this opportunity to encourage you to be ambitious in your pledges in the ongoing exercise for 2024-2025.

Finally, there continues to be an urgent need to improve the effectiveness of our return system, addressing the existing loopholes in a consistent manner. In addition to the need for a renewed legal framework based on the recast Return Directive, it is essential to step up the operational actions making returns smoother and more effective. The Commission and Frontex are intensifying their efforts to support Member States. In particular, the Return coordinator, together with the Member States in the High-Level Network for Return is working on developing a 'Schengen model for an effective return system', to address persistent shortcomings, while building on the experience and good practices of Member States. Furthermore, since the Commission's recommendation on mutual recognition of return decisions, engagement is under way with Member States to ensure its operational effect, supported by more than 80 000 new alerts on return created since the Schengen Information System was upgraded in March this year.

To maintain the Union's capacity to respond to pressing migration challenges, we need to ensure that we have sufficient funding for an effective migration and asylum management system, and to be ready for unforeseen situations. Moreover, designing comprehensive partnerships to deepen our cooperation with key partners, requires mobilising adequate levels of funding. We also need to urgently reflect on future EU assistance to Syrian refugees in Türkiye. The MFF mid-term review provides the opportunity to address these needs as set out in the Commission's proposal of last week.

Managing migration requires us to be determined, responsive and coordinated. The challenges are constantly shifting, as routes and the tactics of the migrant smugglers also evolve and change. Our collective efforts have shown that the EU is strong and able to tackle complex issues in a spirit of cooperation and mutual trust, and it is in that same spirit that we must continue going forward.

Yours sincerely,

Ursula von der Leyen
